ASSIGNMENT: 10/9/2002 by Teacher Jane Priewe

[Take the classified section of the newspaper, pick an interesting object for sale and invent its history, who made it, who bought it, who used it and why is it up for sale?]

WRITING: 10/16/2002 by Seymour Wen

The ad of an object for sale on many newspaper, I am going to talk about, is the cell phone in the category of electronic communication products playing an important role in the development of the "information freeway". I am not an expert in that field. In accordance with the assignment, I herewith invent its history, who made it, who bought it, who used it and why it is up for sale based on common sense.

In the early 1900s, people predicted that the world would enter into an era of "information freeway". Such prediction was proved true except the realization came at least five years earlier. While most people about ten years ago in the 20th century had a vague idea about the word of information freeway, cell phones gradually sneaked onto many user's hands and its sales volume had been growing rapidly year by year. Cops were supposed one of the first groups of users. Now users are more and more plentiful. Other products in the same category are those relevant to PC internet, cable TVs and some other application.

Who made it? The military agent of the USA specifically invented such products due to the need to maintain war superiority. Some media and industries collaborated and made it for commercial use for profit seeking.

Who bought it? The people having the need to use are inclined to buy it. Chances are people need a handy instrument to communicate with the remote for business, emergency, and sentiment like love talk and even gossip talk.

Who used it? People in the above-mentioned bought and used it. Now it is almost a fashion to some people to have a cell phone hanging on the waist or hiding in a hand bag. I bought a cell phone because my wife was sick since the past April. While I am going out for shopping or something else inevitably leaving her at home alone, I have the need of a cell phone to keep possible contact with her.

Why is it up for sale? This is a most useful and lovely product now a day. The government and the related industries set up the related communication satellites in the sky, cell phone manufacturers are making such phone products for sale and make profit on the ground.

COMMENTS:

Be sure to read it over your finished product, Seymour. I actually found nothing wrong with it. Just made a few changes for smoother reading. It's good.
