ASSIGNMENT: 3/5/2003

Brainstorm about different types of jobs, pick the most interesting one, and write personal essay about what you think it would be like to hold that job day in and day out.

WRITING : 3/12/2003

For the average person, the concerns of holding a job are those, such as better income and livelihood, power seeking, learning opportunity, pleasure and some others. For the senior people in retirement like us, income and power seeking could be out of the list. With merely the rest in concern, the job I hold is likely a kind of life style to be considered in this assignment. When we ask a retired person, "What are you doing?" or "What is your job?", the most possible reply is: "I am doing nothing.", or "I don't have a job now.". Now let me take the retirement life style as a job for this assignment.

After retirement in 1985, my wife and I moved to Los Angeles and settled down as residents in the city of Alhambra. In the first couple years we really had some "brainstorms" to figure out what to do in the future. Some of my brainstorm considerations included: playing majiang, visiting Las Vegas, stock speculating, touring, living with our five children once a while in rotation, doing business casually, participating in social activities, reading, writing, computer learning, dancing, self-employment consultation, and so forth.....

After trying to do these activities for more than ten years, I now hold a finalized life style in much smaller scale day in and day out chiefly including: reading, writing, dancing, learning computer, meeting friends, house keeping and caring for my ailing wife. The above have made me happy, healthy, but not wealthy. Among the the above aspects, the work I am yearning most to achieve is to put some of my peculiar thoughts and experiences computerized in my home page "<http://home.earthlink.net/~wen146>." the material in which could be a valuable heritage in future.

Any person must face the reality. Should my living condition have a change some day, the above of my job elements would be adjusted accordingly.
